

PLENTY

Plenty

When I was young and there were five of us, all running riot to my mother's quiet despair,
our old enamel tub, age-stained and pocked upon its griffin claws, was never full.

Such plenty was too dear in our expanse of drought where dams leaked dry and windmills stalled.
Like Mommy's smile. Her lips stretched back and anchored down, in anger at some fault – of mine, I thought – not knowing then it was a clasp to keep us all from chaos.

She saw it always, snapping locks and straps,
the spilling: sums and worries, shopping lists for aspirin, porridge, petrol, bread.

Even the toilet paper counted,
and each month was weeks too long.
Her mouth a lid clamped hard on this.

We thought her mean. Skipped chores, swiped biscuits – best of all when she was out of earshot stole another precious inch

up to our chests, such lovely sin, lolling luxuriant in secret warmth disgorged from fat brass taps, our old compliant co-conspirators.

Now bubbles lap my chin. I am a sybarite.
The shower's a hot cascade and water's plentiful, to excess, almost, here.
I leave the heating on.

And miss my scattered sisters,
all those bathroom squabbles and, at last,
my mother's smile, loosed from the bonds of lean, dry times and our long childhood.
